Veterinary Care Considerations

Rethinking how we proactively approach proper pet care during a nation-wide veterinarian shortage.

PRIMARY CARE POINTERS

- Many local vets are not accepting new patients. Establishing with a vet office will take extra effort during this time.
- Every pet owner should be established with a primary care vet. Contact local clinics first, and then expand to surrounding areas if needed. You may have to drive a longer distance, but the security of your pet's health is worth it!
- Expect to take a healthy pet to the vet at least annually for vaccines and routine tests. It is important to have a primary care vet for common occurrences like ear infections, skin issues, nail trims, digestive issues, injuries, urine/stool changes, refilling medications, etc.
- Most importantly, BE KIND. These are trying times and a shortage of appointment openings does not mean that a vet doesn't care. It is exactly the opposite: they care so much that they are spreading themselves thin to care for as many pets as possible.

CREATIVE OPTIONS

- Although it is not a replacement for having a primary care clinic, walk-in vaccine clinics are available through HATS, Soldan's, Tractor Supply, and other mobile providers in the area. Vaccines protect against deadly diseases and should be updated annually or every three years, depending on the vaccine and animal.
- If you are an established client, vet offices will often allow stool samples and urine samples to be dropped off in place of an appointment so that diagnosis can be made and medication can be prescribed if needed. Sending pictures and conferring through email is sometimes an option as well.
- Plan ahead the best you can in order to be proactive and keep your dog or cat's medical treatment up-to-date.
Last minute needs are very difficult to fulfill at this time.

EMERGENCY CARE

- During these challenging times, it is advisable to have an emergency fund of at least $500-$1,000 ready in the case that your pet needs immediate care to save his/her life. Being prepared is key!
- Due to doctor shortages, emergency visits may not be available through your primary care clinic. It is most realistic (whether you have a primary care vet or not) to expect to contact one of the following after-hour or 24-hour emergency clinics if your pet faces a crisis:
